

I have enjoyed the time of not being pestered by telemarketing calls since we have signed in to the no call list. It is and should be my choice as to whether I want to be invaded with sales persons and such. If I am in the need of a product or service, I will seek them.

If I elect to not be called and they do call, they are not going to get my business or cooperation anyway. They are not losing a thing by that choice. They are better off using the no call system by not wasting their time on people who don't want them in the first place.

With out the no call protection, I find myself hurrying to answer the phone, maybe from an inconvenient spot, thinking it may be an important call only to find it is telemarketing. That infuriates me to no end. LEAVE THE NO CALL LAW ALONE!!! If people don't mind being bothered then their names are not on the list. If people don't want to be bothered then leave their names on the list. They aren't going to cooperate with them anyway if called. What is to lose for the Telemarketers with the no call list intact?

Very sincere,

Ivan E. Thornburg